My dear Mr Rambachar

In the accompanying file the First Member has raised a question of constitutional practice and I have dealt with it in the Submission Note. There is one other point which I have to mention in this connection. If there is a departure from constitutional practice it consists in a Member making the Final Note (in a case in which a unanimous decision has been reached by the Council after mutual exchange of views) a controversial document criticising the manner in which a Colleague previously in charge of the Department has dealt with the case. The minute of the First Member and the reply of the Third Member are on the file, and the matter might well have been left there for the Dewan to submit to His Highness if necessary with such observations as he might wish to add. The introduction of the subject into the Final Note of the Member is unusual and, in my humble opinion, open to objection from several points of view. I might have have referred the note back to the Member for revision but have not done so in this case in order to avoid further delay in the disposal of the matter.
